| 2020-FNS-01967-F | 1/24/2020 | Russell, M.   | The most recent data from NSLP and other food supplement plans for the Virginia Beach Public school system such as how many students were on the plan most recently and how many students were on the plan the year before that. I am also curious to see if there have been amendments to the NSLP and I would like to receive all of those amendments.         |

| 2020-FNS-03138-F | 3/20/2020 | Cornish, L.   | The requested records include all documents, memoranda, records of meetings, personal notes, and correspondence, both hard copy and electronic, and in any other medium, that pertain to, or have a bearing on, the deliberations of the 2020 Dietary Guidelines Advisory Committee (the Advisory Committee), and its Subcommittee on Dietary Fats and Seafood (the Subcommittee) in particular, on the following two questions listed on the Dietary Guidelines website https://www.dietaryguidelines.gov/work-under-way/review-science/topics-and-questions-under-review : 1. What is the relationship between seafood consumption during pregnancy and lactation and neurocognitive development of the infant? (Up to date as of 10/22/2019); and 2. What is the relationship between seafood consumption during childhood and adolescence (up to 18 years of age) and neurocognitive development? (Up to date as of 9/19/2019). We are particularly interested in the records pertaining to the following: • The Subcommittee's preliminary conclusion announced to the public on January 23, 2020 that moderate evidence suggests that seafood eaten during pregnancy is associated with improvements in cognitive and language/communications development. (Meeting recording: https://youtu.be/fRq_F2me8Tc ) • The Subcommittee's alteration of its preliminary conclusion to limited evidence suggests that seafood eaten during pregnancy may be associated favorably with measures of cognitive development and language/communication skills in the child, as announced to the public on March 13, 2020. (Meeting recording: https://globalmeetwebinar.webcasts.com/viewer/event.jsp?ei=1289846&amp;tp_key=af6515fc8a ) • All systematic reviews of the evidence relating to either conclusion performed by the Nutrition Evaluation Systematic Review (NESR) Team of the Department of Agriculture. • All peer reviews of these systematic reviews and all records by the NESR Team pertaining to those peer reviews. • Communications between the NESR Team and the Advisory Committee, and the Subcommittee in particular, pertaining to the systematic reviews or to peer reviews of those systematic reviews. • Communications between the Advisory Committee, and the Subcommittee in particular, and either the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Department of Health and Human Services, Food and Drug Administration, and Environmental Protection Agency on any matters that are relevant to the conclusions noted in the first two bullets. • Records relating to the decision by the Subcommittee to conclude that moderate evidence suggests that seafood eaten during childhood and adolescence has no unfavorable association with measures of neurocognition while being unclear if that is the similar conclusion for seafood eaten during pregnancy.
